wanderings in Sanctums and Among

Editors. DEAR JOURNAL : Leaving the railroad depot in Marion, S. C., we walked up into the village," and entered what in Mexico per of the street thinking where we had better go, when on a red building quite across the square, we thought we saw a sign, Star ence of the senior, who presides over the were broken or sprained. destinies of the Marion Star. We took a hasty glance at the room, gathering in our mind the contents almost as quickly as Houdon, the magician, used to make inventories of rooms, or catalogues of libraries. Let us see if memory serves. One old rusty stove, no fire in it, two chairs, one box set on end, serving the purpose of a chair, three sticks of wood, a pile of old exchanges, one window-half paper panes, rest of glass, one shoe brush, evidently the property of the junior. One desk, at which in one of the chairs sat the senior. Suavity is a faint term for describing the pleasantness of our reception. We sat and rolled our eyes over the labels of the pigeon holes of the desk, which told that the Major spent his hours of relaxation in the lighter and more pleasant pursuits appertaining to legal practice. There were labels of any quantity of hard named "writs" and "summonses," "bonds" and "notices," which instructive to our readers, but we did not come to see them, but to interview the editors. The Major looks like a tolerably well preserved man of thirty-three years old .-The cut of his countenance is almost Grecian in profile, but in front nearly wide enough to be Dutch, and but for his old Scotch name we might have judged from his evident tendency to embonpoint his square shoulders, and erect form that he was of teutonic origin. His face and form are those of a man who could endure a considerable amount of labor without flagging, and he has a dreamy kind of way of shutting his eyes as if he was looking at something not visible to a bystander. Was it that power of introspection which enables men sometimes to think of one thing whilst talking of another. The Major is the heavy artillery of the Star. From his pen come the leading political articles of a paper which exercises no small influence in the section. in which it is published, and what it fails to say in print the Major is presumed to be able to say on the stump, to which, we are advised, he occasionally resorts when his columns will not hold the matter. -We had just entered into conversation when the door flew open, and, with almost a bound, a young gentleman entered the sanctum, talking over his shoulder to some one behind him as he came, and we had the pleasure of meeting Mr. Steadman, the Junior. Here is a man for the out-door work on a paper. He sat down on the box for five seconds, he got up and turned round five seconds more, he walked three steps towards the door and three steps back ten seconds more, he caught up a paper and put it on the desk, five seconds more; he kicked the cold stove and stirred up the three sticks of wood, he looked out the window through all the glass panes a few seconds, and all the time he was telling us how glad he was to see us and inquiring about absent friends. We replied, as rapidly as possible, for we saw he was in a great hurry, and, after a few minutes conversation, he made a few rapid remarks to the Major, excused himself to us and hastily left.. We had an idea at that moment that some momentous events were transpiring in the village, which required him in his reportorial capacity to be present. Well, now I know all our young lady readers would like to know how the Junior looks. He is hard to describe. He has so much animal and mental vitality in him that no photographer has ever been able to take his picture-to his satisfaction. This much we can venture, ladies, he is fine looking and unmarried. We think the Star has been materially improved since he came to it. The zest, the life, the fun of the paper, are all of his getting up. The local items are faithful pictures of what he sees and hears, written with a pen which yields word for thought with amazing facility. We brought our pleasant interview to a close, and went to see the Crescent. The editor was out, but on Sunday we visited the Sunday School, and found him standing in front of about an hundred children, beating time in the air with his hand and leading the singing. He is a tall, sedate looking man, with large whiskers, which are carefully combed downward to protect his throat-and preserve his singing powers, no doubt-with a deep set eye, which changes in conversation, flashing from light blue almost up to purple; and, while singing, his manner is animated as if he felt the thrill of every chord on every nerve of his body. When he closed the exercises and moved out of the church you would never have thought that a "concord of sweet sounds" could make such a difference in the man, he had subsided in a grave, rather stern looking representative of an elder in the church. The Crescent is ably edited. It strikes the vices of the rulers of South Carolina with heavy blows. There is no uncertain sound. Positions are well taken and well discussed, and all feel sure the editor means just what his editorials say, and that he fully believes them all. Our visit to the Marion press was pleasant and beartily all imaginable success, as we went in search of other sanctums, being as ever "IN TRANSIT."

Some one asked Mrs. Cady Stanton if she thought that girls possessed the physique necossary for the wear and tear of a college course of study. Her reply is both sensible and sarcastic. "I would like to see you," said Mrs. Stanton, "take thirteen hundred igh to twenty pounds' weight of clothes to | morrow. their waists, perch them upon three inch heels, cover their heads with upples, chignons, rats and mice, and stick ten thousand pairpins into their scalps; if they can stand all this, they can stand a little Latin and Greek."

Some Yankee painters were employed in a frontier Canadian town to decorate the walls of a ball-room in a tavern. As no heir own patriotic instincts and style, and minted in a sort of rough fresco the Amercan shield, with eagle, arrows and all, and the motto, "E Plurious Unum." The publican returned just as the painters had finshed their work and were eating their supper. After surveying their design, he made short work of the artists—kicking them out of the house " pay, and telling them he'd teach them better than to insult him and the Queen by painting "that cussed great Pluribus Unum over his fire-

A Maniac's Last Leap. Lafayette R. Fish committed suicide his house, at Hicks and Fulton streets, Brooklyn, Wednesday morning. Mr. Fish was forty-seven years of age, temperate and industrious, but of weak mind. Five years ago he was a prosperous wholesale grocer in this city, but so prodigal that ruin overtook upon his mind, and the apparent slights which he sometimes received from his old associates stung him deeply. He frequently complained to his wife that his brain was burning-that his hair felt like threads of molten lead. He made three several attempts to take his life, but was always frustrated by his wife's sleepless vigilance. His morbid fancies assumed a form so alarming that his wife feared to share his room, and slept on a lounge near the door, her ears ever on the alert for his slightest movement, and her eyes watchful of all his actions. Last Thursday Mr. Fish complained of feeling unusually ill, and from that time up to the morning of his death he rapidly grew worse. Yesterday his wife left him for a few moments, not without misgivings, to procure medical assistance. When she returned a great crowd was collected about her house, which fell back at her approach, and disclosed to her gaze the mangled corpse of her husband. It appears that Fish had availed himself of her absence to carry out his cherished plan, and, climbing to the roof of the house, which is four stories high, took the fatal leap, dashing out his brains upon the sidewalk .- N.
